City & school district elections: incumbents appear ready to defend seats

News-Ledger Staff

With over a week left for candidates to file to run for school board, mayor or city council in West Sacramento, it looks like all the incumbents are making plans to defend their seats.

As of Monday:

Mayor Christopher Cabaldon has "pulled papers" (taken out paperwork) to run for another two-year term as the city's mayor. He has held the post continuously since 2004, when the city adopted a system to choose its mayor separately from the other members of the city council.

Cabaldon has frequently drawn a challenger. In 2012, he faced professional boxer Oleg Maskaev. In 2010, it was former city councilman Greg Potnick.

Cabaldon has not yet filed his candidacy paperwork to make his bid official. No opponents have yet picked up candidacy paperwork from city hall.

Also on the November 4 ballot are the city council seats held by Mark Johannessen and Chris Ledesma. Both men have "pulled papers" to run for another four-year term.

Also picking up their city council candidate paperwork are challengers Jeff Lyon and Nancy Tran. Both were among the several-dozen people who applied to fill a city council vacancy earlier this year when Oscar Villegas left to accept a position as a Yolo County Supervisor. (Beverly "Babs" Sandeen was the person selected for the council vacancy.)

According to the applications submitted by Tran and Lyon at that time:

Tran lives in the Ironworks subdivision near Raley Field and is an "associate energy specialist" with the California Energy Commission.

Lyon is a state government employee from 4th Street, also in the northern waterfront area.

Meanwhile, over at the Washington Unified School District, there are two seats on the ballot in November. They're currently held by Sarah Kirby-Gonzalez and Adam Menke, and they're both for four-year terms on the board of trustees (school board).

Kirby-Gonzalez, a teacher who works in another district, has filed her candidacy papers.

So has challenger Jeff Reyes, who lists himself as a "school counselor/educator" who lives on Prosser Street.

Incumbent Adam Menke has not filed his paperwork. But he told the News-Ledger yesterday that he does plan to seek another term.

So anyone who earns any of these local offices this year will likely have to unseat an incumbent.

The deadline to file is August 8, but the deadline will be extended several days for challengers for any race in which an incumbent fails to file for re-election.

Did City follow rules for 'Horror Campout'?

■ Special event permits don't require notice to neighbors, reports police department

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

After the "Great Horror Campout" broke camp on July 19, the News-Ledger was left with a couple of lingering questions about the permit process that allowed it to set up on a Southport farm on July 18-19. That commercial event, at which paid customers camped overnight and participated in horror-themed activities, was viewed as a disruption by at least a few of its Burrows Avenue-area neighbors.

Some of those neighbors protested at a city council meeting two days ahead of the event, as the permit was still being weighed. They objected to congestion, noise, and to the event's gory content, and said no one had given them proper notice of the permit application.

The News-Ledger asked local police if either the applicant, 1031 Productions, or the landowner, Dave Vierra of Vierra Farms, were required to give advance

The SYCAMORE TRAIL before January was neither open, inviting, nor safe. The first phase of a jointly-funded project has started to clean it up, adding trees and paths for bikes and pedestrians. The rider went to jail.

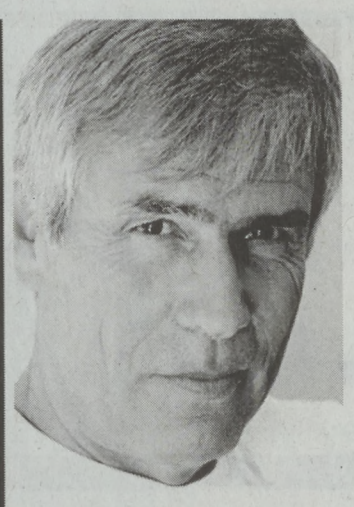
A century after the 'war to end all wars'

My Back Pages



By Daryl Fisher

How many of you remembered that last weekend was the 100th anniversary of the beginning of World War I? I know I didn't, and the only reason it came to my attention was that I accidentally ran across a small article about it online. Maybe that is one of the reasons mankind keeps having wars, because unless a relative or friend was killed in one of them, they just kind of melt back into history to make room for the next one. But you would think that a war as terrible as WWI was would be much better remembered, since more than 16 million people died in it, including 116,516 Americans.

It started out simply enough, with the assassination of an archduke named Ferdinand, which kicked off a bunch of alliances that ended up with a four-year struggle to the death between England, France and Russia on one side, and Germany, the Austro-Hungarian Empire and the Ottoman Empire on the other. And if American hadn't finally come into the war and tipped the balance towards the former, who knows how long it would have lasted, with both sides dug into trenches and the whole bloody struggle deadlocked.

Anyway, more than two decades ago I wrote a column about the one and only conversation I ever had with a WWI veteran. I met him in a veteran's hospital in Martinez, California, shortly after I had returned from Vietnam, and at the time, he had really impressed me with his vivid memories of "the war that was going to end all wars." He recalled with great nostalgia everything from the sickening smell of mustard gas to the muddy, rat-infested trenches he had hunkered down in for months at a time. He talked at length about all the horrifying battlefield deaths he had witnessed and how lucky he had been to make it back alive to his beloved home state of Tennessee. He also repeated, with great emotion and clarity, the following two stanzas from his favorite war poem, "In Flanders Fields":

In Flanders Fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row
That mark our place; and in the sky
The larks, still bravely singing, fly
Scarce heard amid the guns below.

We are the Dead. Short time ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved and were loved, and now we lie,
In Flanders Fields.

With his eyes growing wet, he added, "That was the most god-awful war that ever was!"

"It sounds like you had a pretty tough time," I said.

"Sonny," he finally replied, "the sad fact is that it was also the best time of my life." He sat up a little straighter in his wheelchair and took a deep drag off a cigarette he wasn't supposed to be smoking. "Do you know how many people on this here earth have died in wars, and just in this century alone?" I shook my head `no'. "Hell, it only took Hitler about four or five years to knock off 40 million all by himself. Add in my war, Korea, your war, and all the other little wars that are always going on somewhere and I bet we're talking over 100 million easy."

The number seemed to mind-boggle him as he opened his tired eyes wide and slowly rolled his wheelchair closer to my bed. "I imagine you think everyone in their right mind hates war, don't you?" he continued. "Well, you'd be wrong about that! If everyone really hated it, we'd stop doing it, now wouldn't we?" I smiled, and that seemed to upset him. "I'm serious! We make war awful damn appealing, and for a lot of guys like me, it was the biggest adventure of our life. Hell, I got to see all kinds of places I'd never have seen otherwise, and everyone treated me like a king when I got back home. Plus the whole time I was overseas, I pretty much got to act as crazy and stupid as I wanted. I guess once people agree that killing each other is okay, then all the other rules get tossed into the crapper, too."

His facial expression suddenly turned serious and he lowered his voice.

"I don't mind telling my war stories, Sonny. Fact is, I love to tell `em since there ain't much else to do in this place anyway. But every generation also owes it to the next to tell some of the truth about war, too – how it ain't all medals and glory – how damned scary the fighting is – how all the wrong people seem to get killed – how bloody and ugly the dying is – how it's usually started by a bunch of politicians who don't have to do any of the fighting themselves – and how few times it really settles a god-damned thing."

'I imagine you think everyone in their right mind hates war, don't you?' the aged veteran asked me.
'Well, you'd be wrong about that! If everyone really hated it, we'd stop doing it, now wouldn't we?'

He put out his cigarette with his arthritic fingers, placed the filter in his shirt pocket, and positioned his wheelchair to leave.

"It's been good talking to you, Sonny, and I hope you're feeling better soon."

"I really appreciate you stopping by," I said.

"I always make it a point to welcome you Vietnam boys."

"It was very nice meeting you."

"My pleasure. And don't forget, somewhere along the line, try to remind a few people in the next generation just how god-awful war really is."

I nodded my head that I would.

notice of the planned event to neighbors as part of the city permit process.

According to the West Sacramento Municipal Code, said Lieutenant Tod Sockman in an email, "no prior event notifications to surrounding area is required by City or event staff."

He added that a rep from the event company "walked the neighborhood and left her personal card and phone number with any residents to talk to her," making that effort "of her own will (and in an attempt) to work with the neighbors to address any issues."

The News-Ledger also relayed a charge from one neighbor who said he had asked the police department for a copy of the permit application shortly before the event and was told to file a California Public Records Act request and wait five days.

Lieutenant Sockman appeared to say that didn't happen:

"Everyone that asked for a copy of the permit from the police department was directed to City Hall, which handles all PRAs (Public Records Act requests)," wrote Sockman. "(The City) had a copy to hand out if someone came in, as directed. According to City Hall, only one person actually went to City Hall to get a copy of the permit and he had it within one business day, which was prior to the weekend events."

Lieutenant David Delaini noted that the "Great Horror Campout" filed its permit less than the required 45 days in advance, but for good cause – the event's initial choice for a site in Sacramento had been damaged by a fire. The Chief of Police – who is responsible for deciding on such a permit, after getting input from other city departments – has the ability to waive the 45-day requirement for "good cause."

Delaini said the permit was issued the day before the event, with the provision that there be no amplified sound after 11 p.m.

"During the course of the event," he added, "officers from the West Sacramento Police Department conducted a total of seven 'extra patrols' of the area. The event generated a total of two documented calls for service. One of which was a medical aid and one was for a female who was refusing to leave the event. . . no noise complaints were called in during this two-day event."

The News-Ledger did spot one other crime report apparently affiliated with the "Great Horror Campout." The morning after, "Great Horror Campout" staff reported the vandalism of a $999 mannequin.

Guest opinion: what's the big 'whoop'?

From Constance Caldwell, M.D., Yolo County Health Officer

You have probably heard on the news that we are in the midst of a pertussis (whooping cough) epidemic in California. In Yolo County, we have seen nearly 80 cases so far in 2014, compared to four cases in all of 2013.

What is pertussis anyway and what can you do?

Pertussis is a bacterial illness which causes severe coughing fits that can last for weeks. It is spread easily by coughing on others. Pertussis is most dangerous in young infants who can become severely ill very quickly and even die from it.

For children, a typical case of pertussis starts with a cough and runny nose for one to two weeks. The cough then worsens and children may have rapid coughing spells that end with a whooping sound. Young infants may not have typical pertussis symptoms and may have no apparent cough. Parents may describe episodes in which the infant's face turns red or purple. For adults, pertussis may simply be a cough that persists for several weeks.

What can you do about it? Prevention of the illness with the vaccine is the best course of action. However, immunity from pertussis is not life-long. Because infants can get very sick and even die, we are most focused on preventing the spread of illness to them. It is now recommended that pregnant women receive a dose of TdaP vaccine with every pregnancy. Infants can start their vaccine series as early as six weeks of age. Children entering kindergarten and seventh grade need a booster of the pertussis vaccine. One dose of TdaP vaccine is also recommended for all adults, especially those living with or caring for young infants.

The vaccine is available from most physicians and clinics and from many pharmacies. It's also available at the Yolo County Health Department for those without insurance or who are on MediCal. There is a $10 fee, but no one will be turned away. Immunization clinics are held on Monday afternoons from 2:00 to 5:00 p.m. on a drop-in basis. The first Monday of the month, the immunization clinic is held in West Sacramento at 500B Jefferson Boulevard. On the second, third and fourth Mondays, it is held in Woodland at 137 North Cottonwood Street.

Antibiotics may shorten the course of the illness, but most importantly, limit the spread of the disease to others.

The Yolo County Children's Alliance is working with the City of West Sacramento to lead the rehabilitation of the Sycamore Trail. The trail runs north of West Capitol and next to Poplar Avenue. It's next to the Westfield Village Elementary School – and was formerly used by schoolchildren as a hazard-strewn shortcut.

The first phase of the rehab project is scheduled to finish next June, and will include a party. The trail will become part of the city bike/pedestrian trail network under development.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Oil car dangers

More oil tank train cars will soon be running through Roseville, Sacramento, West Sacramento, Davis and Woodland in route to Bay Area refineries, with the main concern being potential damage from derailments, including major fires. With some cites already protesting a potential increase in accidents, here's an idea to greatly reduce that possibility: Equip all oil tanker trains with a remote controlled pilot engine, like they now do in Woodland, north of Cottonwood near East Street. That pilot engine would run interference and it would derail and take the fall, not allowing the main train to proceed further until the tracks were safely repaired. And hopefully, as other cleaner-burning fuels replace oil products, we can reverse the notion that making more money is more important than maintaining safety.

PICKS OF THE WEEK

"The Railway Man" (R) -- Eric Lomax (Colin Firth) lives a quiet life with a beautiful woman who adores him (Nicole Kidman) and his hobby -- he's a train enthusiast. Forty years before, he was an English soldier in the Pacific front, captured by Japanese forces, tortured and forced to work on a railroad. In the 1980s, one of Eric's old comrades gives him a tip; he's found the Japanese officer responsible for much of their torment. The quiet Englishman is caught between trauma and love, revenge and forgiveness.

While the story is unquestionably powerful -- it's based on Lomax's autobiography -- the direction of the film goes for the understated, sometimes to a fault. This movie can prove thoughtful and satisfying, if you're patient with the storytelling.

"Locke" (R) -- Want to spend 90 minutes stuck in a car next to a driver constantly yelling and being yelled at via hands-free phone? Sounds lame? What if it's actually a tight dramatic thriller expertly handled by one very talented actor? Ivan Locke

Tom Hardy in 'Locke'

(Tom Hardy, from "Dark Knight Rises" and "Warrior") is speeding through London at night trying to do the right thing -- a one-night stand is giving birth, his wife and children are upset, and a multi-million dollar project at work is imploding. The whole time, all you see and hear is just Hardy in the driver's seat.

It works. Once you're strapped in for the ride, the movie keeps you fixed. Hardy is praised for his fantastic physical performances -- Bane in "Dark Knight Rises," and a charmingly psychotic prisoner in "Bronson" -- but here he proves that he can carry a whole movie while sitting down.

DOGS OF THE WEEK

"Rage" (R) -- The Cage has come unhinged! Nicolas Cage! He's loose, and he's so pissed. Nick Cage plays a put-together businessman with a dark past he can't erase. Bad guys come for his daughter, and Cage must go on the obligatory paternal rampage to get her back -- or at least get revenge. He shoots his way past thugs, shouts his way past horrendous accents, and grimaces as hard as he's ever grimaced, but it's all for naught. It's not a thrilling revenge flick. You'll spend the last act wishing you could escape The Cage.

"Frankie and Alice" (R) -- A gorgeous go-go dancer (Halle Berry) suffers from blackouts and episodes of inexplicable behavior. Turns out she has some other people living in her head -- a 7-year-old genius and a racist Southern belle. Multiple personality stories are so last decade, and this one doesn't do anything to stand out from the melodrama. The film was finished several years ago, had a super-short limited release in 2010, then was kept under wraps until now. Let that be a clue.

"Our Declaration: A Reading of the Declaration of Independence in Defense of Equality"
by Danielle Allen
(W.W. Norton, $27.95 hardcover)
Reviewed by Molly Ford

The Declaration of Independence is one of the world's defining historical texts. Its words still resonate throughout the United States' political and judicial systems, inspiring and influencing millions, both Americans and people around the world.

But given its importance, how are so many of us unfamiliar with this document besides a very rudimentary understanding and rote repeating of "life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness"? Isn't it time to take a deeper look at the context, both historical and literary, surrounding this powerful document?

In "Our Declaration," social-science professor Danielle Allen brings to life the 1,337 words of the Declaration of Independence.

Going phrase by phrase through the document that changed the world and birthed a nation more than two centuries ago, Allen illustrates her teaching and examples through current pop-culture references and historical tidbits -- perfect for the trivia lover, history buff or anyone who just wants to know more about how our country began.

One particularly cool note Allen shares is how very slight tweaks or modifications were made to the Declaration in each version, depending on how the operator of the printing press formatted the document, showing the power of even printing press operators during this time period.

Allen also includes her experience teaching the Declaration of Independence to two very different socioeconomic groups: elite undergraduate students at the University of Chicago and a class of non-traditional adult night students in the same city, a study in contrasts and also surprising similarities.

If you are looking to be more informed on the cornerstone document of AmericaÕs history, this is your read.

A Melon by Any Other Name

Crenshaw, Musk, Honeydew, Casaba, Water, Persian ..: the list of melons that are grown these days is long. Melons come in a many sizes, shapes, colors and flavors. Sweet, watery and cooling, they're a gift of the summer harvest that quenches our thirst with a food we can practically drink and eat at the same time!

Melons prefer hot, dry days and cool evenings to produce the sugar that gives them their nectarous flavor. Depending on where you live, a ripe, juicy, truly sweet melon may be a gift of the harvest at your local grocery store. While melons transport well, they must be harvested for shipping while still green. Sometimes this works well, other times not, and it can be just another case of falling for beauty that is only skin deep.

When choosing melons at the store, press and smell the spot where the fruit was severed from the stem. It should give slightly to the touch and exude a pleasant perfume. Almost all melons, except watermelons, can be judged this way.

Looking for a good watermelon is a little more difficult. There is science behind the "thumping" of a watermelon to test for ripeness. A ripe melon will give off a hollow sound, which indicates that the melon has developed its water content.

All melons should feel heavy for their size, a sign that they are full of juice. Locally grown melons also will have a flat, yellow spot on one side where it lay as it ripened in the field.

Melons are an ancient fruit, first cultivated in Asia and Africa over 4,000 years ago. From there they were introduced to western and northern Europe. Watermelons in particular provided an important source of water to primitive people, and it is believed that the first watermelons were brought to the Americas by African slaves.

As a group, melons are a truly beneficial food. They are low in calories and high in potassium, as well as vitamins A and C. They also are a delicious source of fiber. Watermelons are high in lycopene, the pigment that gives them that beautiful pinkish-red color. Lycopene has been shown to help prevent heart disease and some cancers.

Even though most melons are known for their sweetness, their flavor melds well with savory ingredients: mixed with herbs and vinegars in salads, or paired with cured meats such as prosciutto and salami for an appetizer. For dessert, the options go from simply scooping the seeds from half a cantaloupe and replacing it with a dollop of ice cream or yogurt, to combining melons with other fruits to serve with a pudding or cream, or pureeing melons for sorbets and ices.

My recipe for Jellin' Melons is an easy, kid-friendly dessert, and the perfect way to showcase the best of summer melons.

JELLIN' MELONS

Fresh or frozen pineapple, papaya, kiwi, figs, guava and gingerroot all contain enzymes that prevent gelatin from setting, so never use them in gelatin recipes. If you don't have strawberries on hand, you can use a cup of any canned fruits or juices, since the canning process kills this enzyme.

1 large cantaloupe or honeydew melon
1 package (3 ounces) strawberry-banana gelatin (or your choice of gelatin flavor)
1 cup boiling water
1/2 cup unsweetened applesauce
1 cup sliced fresh strawberries, leaves and stems removed

1. Cut the melon in half lengthwise from bud to stem end; discard seeds. Cut a thin slice off the bottom of each half so the melon sits level. Pat the inside of the melon dry and turn it melon-side down on a paper towel to drain thoroughly.
2. In a large bowl, dissolve gelatin in boiling water. Stir in applesauce and strawberries. Pour into melon halves. Cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate overnight.
3. Just before serving, carefully slice each melon half into three wedges. Any extra gelatin can be poured into a bowl, covered with plastic wrap and chilled until set. Makes 6 servings.

GO FIGURE! by Linda Thistle

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF ROBERT J.E. BROWN (CORRECTED) CASE NUMBER PB14-105
To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors, and persons who may otherwise be interested in the will or estate, or both, of Robert J.E. Brown:
A Petition for Probate has been filed by Charles Terry Brown in the Superior Court of California, County of Yolo.
The Petition for Probate requests that Charles Terry Brown be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.
The petition requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.
A hearing on the petition will be held in this court as follows: July 30, 2014, at 9:00 a.m. in Dept. 2, Superior Court of California, County of Yolo, 725 Court St., Woodland CA 95695, Probate Division.
If you object to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.
If you are a creditor or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code.
Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.
You may examine the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a "Request for Special Notice" (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A

You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property.
